Announcement: Call for papers for Philosophy and Theory in Biology

Philosophy & Theory in Biology (P&TB) invites papers from philosophers of science and theoretically inclined biologists who are seeking to interact across disciplinary boundaries. The journal embraces a broad conception of what it means to do "theory" in science and to analyze the sciences philosophically, with the aim of benefiting both research communities in their ongoing scholarship. P&TB welcomes methodologically diverse papers, including but not limited to standard philosophy of biology analyses of concepts or research programs and 'theoretical' papers by biologists (conceptual, mathematical, and otherwise).

P&TB is a peer-reviewed open-access online journal. The journal maintains the highest standards of scholarship while making its papers available at no cost to the academic community, independent scholars, and the public at large.

We accept three types of submissions:

1. Scholarly papers on a specific aspect of philosophy of biology or theoretical biology
2. In-depth "trend" review papers on topics of current interest within the areas covered by the journal
3. Extended (essay style) reviews of a book or books pertinent to the journal.

We also welcome proposals for special issues.
